Dr. Lovett received a BA from Cornell University and has worked in grants and project administration since 2002. After receiving a PhD in molecular microbiology from Washington University in St. Louis, she joined that school's central administrative team, helping faculty find, submit, and manage competitive grant awards. She later assisted the management of a multi-million dollar National Institutes of Health Regional Center of Excellence devoted to biodefense research, where she assembled grant review committees and oversaw grant competitions and awards. After moving to Bryan, Ohio in 2006, she worked as Director of Grants and Research at Northwest State Community College before launching an independent grant consulting business in January 2008.
